

Fire at the Jubilee

The fireworks lit up the sky high above the palace. Queen Elizabeth stood outside the large marquee on the grass of Buckingham Palace. She was enjoying her party celebrating her 60 years on the throne, by drinking champagne and watching famous faces like Tom Jones, David Beckham and Katherine Jenkins. She enjoyed watching Tom Jones and Katherine Jenkins sing and see David Beckham put together a very good speech.

One street away there was a young boy called Liam having a street party with his friends and family. He was eating traditional English foods like sandwiches, fish and chips, sausage rolls and meat pies. He was also waving around his union jack flag and listening to famous 1950 songs. Liam and his friends thought they were very lucky to be able to see the firework display seeing as how they were just one street away from all the action.

The fireworks were simply amazing; they had all sorts of different colours like red, yellow, green, purple, blue and orange. And they managed to do a magnificent firework shaped as the union jack that lit up the sky. The finale was a firework in the shape of the queen's crown. It was gold and had lots of colours to look like the queen's jewels. There were lots of loud bangs and Liam's eyes sparkled in disbelief at what he was seeing.

And suddenly there was a strangely large bang and they heard loud screams and so Liam and his friends ran to see what all the noise was about. They then heard someone say "FIRE FIRE!!!" Liam then realised that the noise was coming from Buckingham Palace. He ran around the corner to see what was happening. He saw people running and climbing the gates to save themselves. But he saw an elderly figure on the ground being left behind. He courageously climbed and ran to see who it was and realised it was the queen. She was coughing ferociously and looked frightened. The marquee had been struck by a firework and was on fire. He then held her hand and called for help. There was so much noise nobody could hear him so he needed to shout even louder. Eventually an ambulance came and the queen was saved and as she left she whispered thank you to Liam.

The next day the story was the top story on the news and Liam and his family were watching an interview with the queen. And the queen mentioned that a little boy called Liam had come to her rescue. The queen then mentioned that she was going to give a medal to the young boy.

Liam was ecstatic and later that week Liam went to visit the queen to receive his medal and have afternoon tea.

And I think we could all agree that this was going to be a jubilee to remember.
